Rabaud's opera ought to grow in the love and admiration of the public with every hearing. It is equally a feast for eye, ear and fancy, and more intelligence and artistic feeling has been expended upon its production than upon any other half-dozen operas in the repertory. It is unique among all the operas which employ local color, and the bubbling invention of the composer plays with equal freedom in poser plays with equal freedom in melodies of the Orient and the music which smacks of modern France.

The orchestral score is a source of delight that never falters for a moment.

kaja at Aeolian Hall Is Largely Attended

Maria Winetzkaja gave a song recital at Aeolian Hall last night, singing century Italians to present-day Englishmen, Americans and mixed people's resident in America. There were groups of Russian songs, which were native to the concert-singer's manner, and also of French. Mme. Winetzkaja got her training largely, if not wholly, in New York, and has sung in opera here and in Hayana.

the vast difference between the dra-matic and recital fields that she made a timid beginning last night and failed to do credit to her voice or her with Douglas Fairbanks as Lieutenant temperament, and that was not awaks ened until she reached Tschaikoffsky's "Adieu, forets," which she sang in the original Russian. Then her voice, a good, resonant mezzo-contralto, tending to the dramatic soprano color, became freer and her utterance less constrained, and the audience, which filled the room, discovered that they were in for an evening of artistic enjoyment.

He jumped fences, climbed Louses, limbed Louses, leaped through the air on the end of a pole and rode bucking horses, and then, when the time came, he lied like a gentleman and save the colonel's wife.

Louis James Boulter Gives

Louis James Boulter, who gave a recital of his own piano compositions last year, repeated the experiment yesterday afternoon at Acolian Hall. On the programme he announced that he appeared "in a programme of new compositions written on melodic lines, and composed since his last recital." There was no doubt of his compositions being written on melodic lines, the melody extending from Chopin to Stephen Foster.

Flay's and Players

"A Little Journey," Rachel Crothers' new play, one of the eight plays scheduled to open during the first three days of next week, has postponed its arrival at the Little Theatre to Thursday night, December 26, instead of Wednester.

Among the titles of the numbers played by Mr. Boulter were "Angelus," "Dance of the Iroquois," "Theme in Gand Variations," "Marche de Triomphe," "Legend" and "Romance." Mr. Boulter is evidently an earnest musician who goes ahead and writes what is in him. If what is in him appeared yesterday unimportant, that does not detract from his seriousness of purpose. As a pianist he possesses an adequate technique and undoubtedly gave an authoritative interpretation of his own compositions.

Invitations have been sent out by Mrs. Cornelius Lawrence Winkler, of this city and Camden, S.
